Five Traits You Want in a Realtor

Interacting with potential buyers for the sale of your home is an extremely important part of my job as a real estate agent. There are numerous traits that make people feel comfortable or uncomfortable. I'd like to share the five most important personality traits that all successful Realtors should have and offer you a complimentary report specific to your neighborhood that I have created.

1. Accuracy. The technical details of real estate transactions are very important. I will perform my duties as your Realtor as accurately as possible. Know that you can depend on me to ensure that all of the details and information will be handled correctly.
2. Self-reliance. I am an extremely self-reliant person and have the emotional stamina that is required of someone in this profession. I don't rely on anyone else to do my job and handle the stresses that accompany being a Realtor well. I understand that when you choose me to be your Realtor, you have put a great amount of trust into me.
3. Aggressiveness. I am not one to give up easily. I keep trying and testing situations without losing hope. Where other people quit, I begin. Although I am aggressive in my work, I know when to take a step back and take a gentler approach. Negotiating the sale of your home should not be taken lightly and sometimes, a little bit of an aggressive attitude to move things forward is needed.
4. Enthusiasm. I believe in what I am doing. I am passionate and dedicated to my career as a real estate agent. I will show your home with enthusiasm and highlight the selling points in a dynamic way that will grab potential buyers' attention. In addition, I will do my best to keep you enthused and in high spirits during what can be a stressful time. I want you to be excited about the sale of your home, and perhaps, your search for a new one.
5. Tact. I am always tactful. In this profession, there are certain situations that you may encounter that need a bit of finesse. I am always honest, and never abrasive. I know how to handle delicate situations and make all parties involved feel comfortable.

As a seasoned salesperson, I know that no two customers will ever be alike. I will take my time to get to know you and the potential buyers of your home. I see each person as an individual and work with them to make the transaction move as quickly and smoothly as possible. I want to guide and assist all my customers toward a successful sales conclusion.

I hope you enjoy receiving my report every other month. I specialize in the representation of homeowners from your community, and believe you deserve access to the most current, objective and comprehensive information affecting the value of your home. If you require the services of a real estate professional in the future, please allow me to outline how I can exceed your greatest expectations.

Best Wishes,

Lori J. Busch
